WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

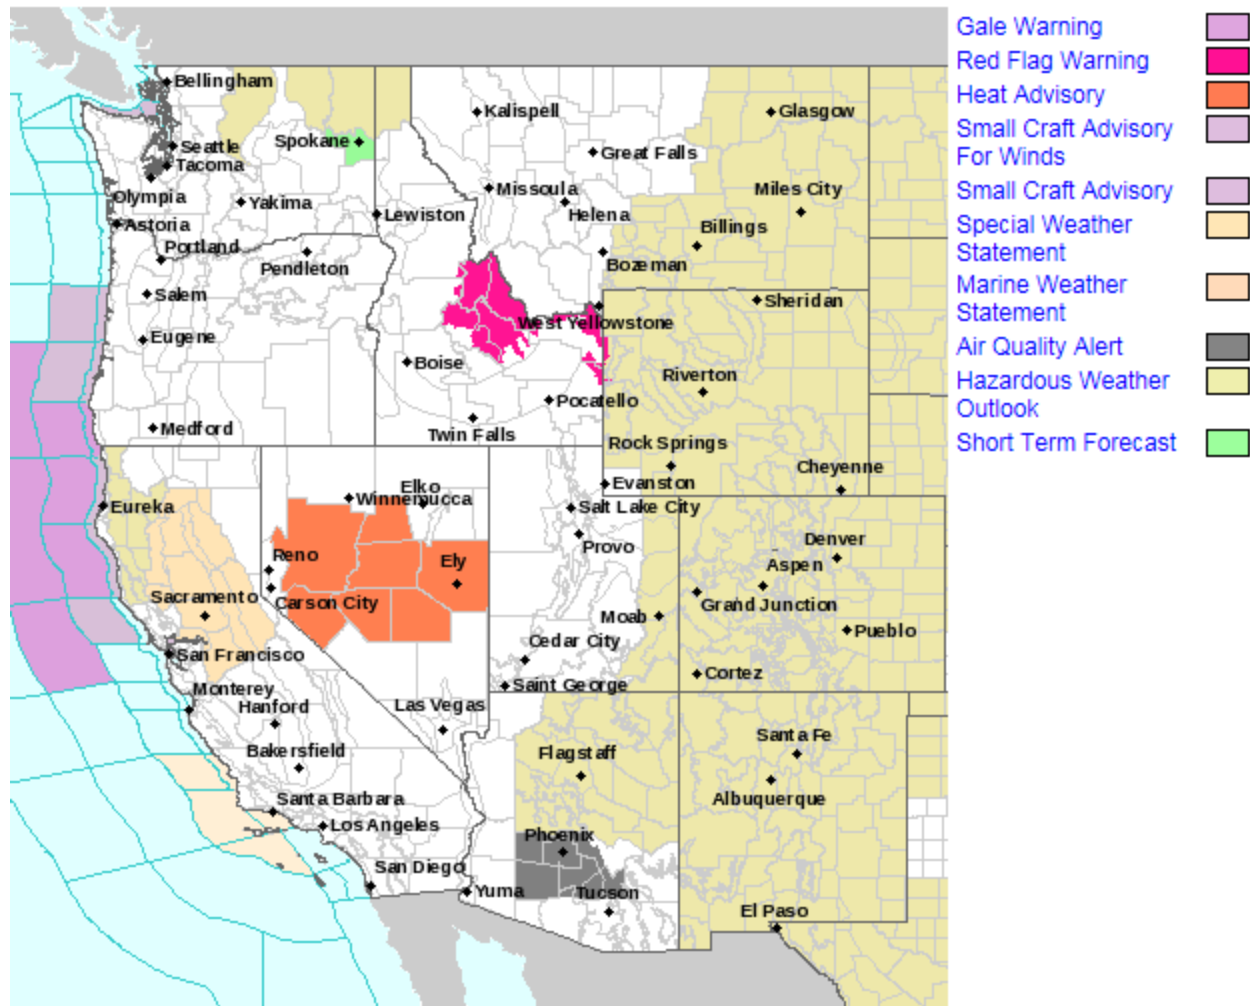

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Strong high pressure has moved into the region and will stay into the weekend before it weakens somewhat. Afternoon highs will become a bit warmer over the next few days with the warmest inland valleys mostly 105-110. Thursday is expected to be the warmest day with highs around 112 in the very warmest inland valleys. The high will lose some strength this weekend with something of a cooling trend likely bringing back seasonably hot temperatures by early next week. Widespread afternoon RH values of 7-15% will continue, and many inland and higher elevation areas will also continue seeing overnight RH recovery of only 30-40%. The marine layer along the coast will be about 1000 ft thick the rest of the week with minimal overnight and morning low cloudiness but is likely to deepen somewhat over the weekend. Winds will generally be light diurnal wind patterns with light downslope/down-valley winds overnight/early morning and light up slope/up valley in the afternoons. Some gusty westerly winds will be possible this weekend over our far eastern areas. Computer forecast models continue hinting that a limited amount of monsoon moisture will be drawn northward over the Sierra Friday and Saturday in particular. There continues to be a small chance of isolated dry thunderstorms over the higher terrain around Tahoe Friday and from there further north along the NV border Saturday. Expect to continue seeing small afternoon cumulus clouds developing daily over the mountains outside of those areas and times.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Strong high pressure centered over Southern Nevada will bring hot and dry conditions away from the coast through Friday. Maximum temperatures will be around 10 degrees above normal, with upper 80s and 90s across the mountains and upper 90s to 110 in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly in the single digits and teens across Central California through Friday. Minimum humidity across Southern California will be between 15% and 25% through Wednesday and then drop into the upper single digits and teens Thursday and Friday. The high pressure area will weaken and shift east as a trough moves inland across the Pacific Northwest Saturday through early next week. This will bring around 5 degrees of cooling and a little increase in humidity to the region. Isolated afternoon showers and thunderstorms will be likely over the mountains and deserts of Southern California east and south of the I-15 Corridor Saturday through early next week. Winds will be normal for this time of year, with a sea breeze pushing inland each afternoon. However, there will be strong and erratic winds in and near any thunderstorms that develop starting this weekend.
